Two Sides is a melding of short verse and photographs designed to look like sumi-e paintings. It is a chronicle of nearly three decades of a life spent embracing both sides of a man's being—one that is assertive and forceful, and the other that is creative and gentle. Neither side is in conflict with the other and together they form a balanced individual.

Kumpf became interested in Japanese culture while serving in the Navy in the late 1960s. Time spent in Japan, Vietnam, and other parts of Southeast Asia left him with many questions about the nature of man and warriorship. In the decades that followed, he became deeply involved in the practice of Bujin-ryu, Aikido, Iaido and, above all, the writing of haiku and other poems.

"Kumpf has that rare talent to gently and reverently part the veils between the seen and unseen worlds in the deep-breathing Irish landscape..."

There are not enough superlatives in the English language to characterize his sensitivity to scene and sense of place, or his talent for coaxing the spirit residing in the Irish landscape out of the earth and into his photos."

Kathleen Cain, The Bloomsbury Review,
Denver, Colorado

- Winner of the Jacket/Cover Design award for the Western US Book Design and Production Competition
- Finalist for the Pictorial Award for the Colorado Center for the Book

"Through his brilliant photography, Tom Kumpf has got under the skin of Ireland and its people, North and South. It is a testament to his sincerity and integrity that he has captured the atmosphere on both sides of Belfast's peace line."

Trevor Birney, Editor of Current Affairs, UTV, Belfast

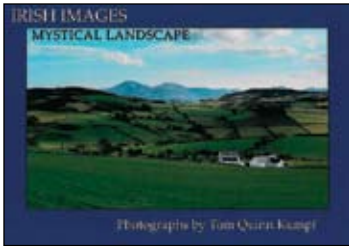

"A crisp, unsentimental revelation of the architecture of an old and bloody conflict from the land of emiphany itself, backlit by an elusive but unmistakable tenderness for the offspring of war."

James Woodruff, Boulder Weekly,
Boulder, Colorado

TOM QUINN KUMPF

Tom Quinn Kumpf grew up in a mixed, working-class neighborhood in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He served with the US Navy in Vietnam and has since been deeply involved in conflict resolution and veterans' issues. He was part of a delegation of Vietnam veterans to visit the former Soviet Union, working with Soviet veterans of the war in Afghanistan, and has worked in many other areas of conflict in the world.

Acting in response to his Irish roots, he went to Northern Ireland to document the effects of The Troubles on the children there. The award-winning book, Children of Belfast, is his collection of documentary essays and photographs about the lives of these children. His book, Ireland: Standing Stones to Stormont, focuses on Irish identity as it relates to Irish legend and the ancient landscape. Two Sides, his most recent book, is a departure from Ireland and has a distinctive Japanese feel, resulting from three decades of studying the martial arts.

He is an internationally recognized, award-winning photographer whose work has appeared in numerous publications and in exhibitions throughout the US, Europe, and the former USSR. He works primarily in documentary, travel, and portrait photography and serves as a consultant for photo projects and exhibitions. He currently lives in Boulder, Colorado.
